WASHINGTON, May 28, 1869.

Upon the advent of General Grant to the Presidency the Conservative press, in some instances, and the socalled "neutral" newspapers, universally, hailed him with the most earnest protestations of deep sympathy and the most devoted promises of applying to the acts of his administration, "a fairness," the like of which was not usually to be found in other than downight parties prints. They affected to discover in a latent meaning of the word "untrammeled," as used in the inaugural, abundance of evi dence of comprehensive, tolerant and patriotic views. At the same junc-Gazette, as matter of fact, upon trustworthy authority, that the new President would seek to outstrip his party in narrow mindedness and recklessness but would, as the price of conciliating the Radicals by his course—de-mand and exercise the right of appointing his own personal and tried friends and obsequious creatures t. all Federal offices of honor or profit. The cor ectness of this view of his feelings and intentions (a view they little regarded,) has come demonstrated by facts of public notoriety. And it i amusing enough to witness the earn estiess with which journals of the Macawher stripe, since the "appoint ments" have all been made, basten to retrace their steps. The sayings of such it is useless to comment upon. But it is gratifying to perceive that the Intelligencer of this city (whose patriotism of the President, has, doubtless, been inspired by pure motives, though based upon an entir 'y mistaken ides of the President's purposes,) to day emphatically gives the General up in these tarse terms: "No sooner has General Grant got under headway in his office, and his administration formed-after a little conservative by-play to start withthan he sinks down to a narrow and inveterate partisan, using his place and patronage wholly for personal and party advantage, beedless altogether of the distates of moderation, of sound policy, of a liberal spirit, and the unasserted claims of a powerful minority -and all in the face of his inaugural declaration, that he did not seek the office and would enter upon its duties

But the east is not keeping poce with the west, whereas we should lend them. Look at Charlotte for inetance, almost if not quite doubling her population since the close of the war, while our borough shows no perceptible improvements. Charlotte has fostered a spirit of enterprise to which Goldsboro' is a stranger, and from which we surely ought to lears a esson. Mechanical and commercial industry is making a city of Charlotte, while Goldsboro' through the inactivity and indolence of her people is still a point of relay for trains and "twenty minutes to dinner."
